TERRIBLE DEED OF DEMENTED. Insane from religious mania following the birth of her last child, two months ago, Mrs. Salvatora Sarti, who lives with her husband, a coal dealer, in New York, tried to kill him while her eldest son looked on in smrzemen', early yesterday. She said later on her arrest that she had been commanded by St. Joseph to slay her husband.

At daybreak she woke up and went to the room back of the one where her husband was sleeping. She ap-peared again with two bed slats, which she leaned against the table and fixed in the form of a cross. Over this she threw a piece of curtain which she took from the rod, in the shape of a garland to decorate the cross that she had made. Before this improvised altar abo satisfied to pray alone, however, and she vent to the side of the bed, shook her husband, and said "Get up and pray."

"L:ave me alone," he said. "I'm sleepy and I want to rest."
Three times she tried to awaken her husband, but each time he shook her off and went to sleep again. Finally another idea occurred to her. She went into the next room where Michael was sleeping. "Come," she said, "and worship."

The sleepy youngster followed her to the front room, where the cross which she had built steed against the table Down on his kees she forced him, and, cuceling beside him, she prayed for him There she left him on his kners and went oward the room where the four smaller hildren were sleeping.

The boy saw her return tiptoeing into the room. One of her hands was on her ips and in the other she held a big

The boy stopped the prayer which he was appearing and screamed. He screamed again when he saw his mother tiptoel is to the bed where this father lay. She aised over the slreping form of her hus

The man half awoke and instinctively, frightened by the cries of the urned over. The knife, which had been aimed at h's throat, came down, cutting a great gash, but talking the jugular

The boy was strong enough to rais he chair, and with it strike the arm in which the knife was held. As he stepped he blow which his mother was siming at h's father the latter sank to the floor, self conscious. H's mother started to ward the room where his little brothers rd sis er- lay, and the boy, fearing for heir safety, stepped in between her and he door to the other room.

By this time his father had recovered trength enough to get to his feet and to grasp the chair which the child had rought him, sud young Michael ran out orcugat him, and young an east ran out into the street for help. As he left, the other children, awakened by the acresms of the boy, got up and looked into the front room. In one corner, leaning on a chair for support, was their father, bleeding and almost too weak to stand rom a great gash in his neck. In another corner of the room was their mother, a knife in her upraised hand, kneeling before a crucifix made from two crossed bed slats.

The boy ran into the street for aid, and, returning with his nucle and a po-liceman, found his mother kneeling in the street with the knife upraised in one hand, praying and exulting because she had done "as St. Joseph nad told ber in her dream." The policeman went up behind her, snatched the knife from her hand, and raised her to her feet. She did not struggle, but smiled.

"All right, I have fluished," she said.
"Last night I had a dresm. St. Joseph came to me in my sleep, dressed in the long while robes which he wears in his pictures in the Bible. He came to me, stood at the head of my bed, and told me to cut my husband's throat, It is said at the hospital that Sarti had a chance of recovery.

In June, 1907, we offered for sale the first lot of Porto Rico Molasses that had ven imported direct to Alexandria since the Civil War. The shipment was a large one and was fairly well distributed among our many customers. Since then we have had numerous repeat orders, and we are now clacing on the market our fifth importation. The Molsses produce in Porto Rico, like our New Orleans product, has suffered with advent of modern science, but there is still some Old Fashioned Sugar Estates left that make Molasses by the Muscovado or Open Kettle Process, And our Ms. Frank King, while in Porto Rico, succeeded in making contract with factors of several of the seplantations, and we now offer the goods for sale.

To those who have had a me of the Molasses out of previous shipments, it is not necessary to talk quality, as orders are coming in to us. 'Ship like last," but we desire to extend the trade to those who do not know us.

We renew our guarantee that if the Molasses is not satisfactory, it can be returned at our expense.
